

"I couldn't have made it through without their support. They were my lifeline when I felt utterly alone."

Living in the bush presents unique challenges and for some women, these challenges are compounded by domestic violence. Their experiences highlight the urgent need for support in remote communities.

According to the Australian Institute of Family Studies, people living in rural, regional and remote Australia are more likely to experience domestic and family violence than people in metropolitan areas. They're also far less likely to have access to dedicated domestic violence services when they need them most.

That's why your help today is so important. You can ensure our Bush Chaplains are there to provide practical, emotional and spiritual support to people experiencing domestic violence in the bush.

Why Bush Chaplaincy matters:

- Isolation: Bush Chaplains bridge the gap when people who need help are cut off from support networks.
- Practical Help: They can provide immediate assistance like emergency accommodation and basic necessities.
- Connection to Services: Bush Chaplains help people to navigate access to counseling and legal support.

Please donate today to show you care.

Visit frontierservices.org/donate or scan the QR code to help

Thank you for your generosity.

