

Domestic and family violence is a hidden crisis in rural and remote Australia.

Already terrifying situations are compounded by:

- Community Dynamics: Small communities can have close-knit social structures where privacy is limited, and 'family problems' aren't spoken about.
- Isolation: Geographic isolation can be used as a form of control, with perpetrators cutting access to transport and communication with friends and family.
- Limited Access to Services: Victims of domestic violence may face hours of driving to access support services.

As an agency of the Uniting Church in Australia, Frontier Services supports people living in rural and remote Australia. Established by Rev John Flynn, we've been providing practical, emotional, and spiritual support to people living on the land for more than 110 years. Your generous donations help send Outback Links volunteers and Bush Chaplains to people in the outback who need a hand.
